1 Introduction

The key aim of the European Employment Observatory (EEO) is to contribute to the development of the European Employment Strategy (EES) through the provision of information and comparative research on employment policies and labour market trends.

This compendium provides information on sources of employment and labour market information available across Europe.

The main official publications, academic journals and statistical sources which are available in 33 European countries<sup>1</sup> are identified. The names of the sources are given in English and the original language, together with a brief description of the source content, details about frequency and language, and a full website address to access the source, where available. There is also a section on the sources of information on labour market and employment at the EU and international level.

<sup>1</sup> The 27 EU Member States, as well as the EEA-EFTA state Norway (in the context of the EEA agreement) and candidate and potential candidate countries Croatia, Turkey, former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), Serbia and Iceland
